

Neesha Ghedia

Neesha brings a unique perspective and unwavering dedication to the field of perfusion. Her journey to perfusion began as a cardiac physiologist, where a transformative encounter with an ECMO retrieval during a STEMI in the cath lab sparked a fascination with perfusion. This pivotal moment ignited a passion that led her to pursue a career as a perfusionist, culminating in her current role at Prince of Wales Hospital.

Beyond the clinical setting, Neesha extends her commitment by shaping the future of perfusion. As the Course Coordinator for the ANZBP, she organises CCP/OTP examinations, ensuring aspiring professionals possess the crucial knowledge and skills to excel. Her dedication extends online, where she manages the ANZBP's LinkedIn page, fostering collaboration and knowledge-sharing within the community.

Outside of the OR, Neesha explores Sydney's hidden culinary gems and vibrant restaurant scene, fuelled by a keen appreciation of food and an unhealthy obsession for coffee. When not on a gastronomic adventure, her wanderlust takes her to explore diverse cultures, with her next vacation always on the horizon.

Neesha's dedication to perfusion education, coupled with her diverse interests and passion for learning, makes her a valuable asset to the ANZBP. She is eager to connect with fellow perfusionists, share knowledge, and contribute to the continued advancement and recognition of the field.
